Let's Do Something: Taking Social Action

Here are some real-life young people who took action to solve a problem.

Let's All Play Together

One fifth grader noticed that some of her classmates were making fun of some students because they were of a different culture. She spoke up and told her classmates to stop bothering them. She went further and befriended the students who were being picked on. As a result of her actions and determination, all the students in her school began playing together.

Talking Turkey

One Thanksgiving, Danny Nally and his sister Betsy learned that the local food bank was short of turkeys. So Danny and Betsy went around the neighborhood and collected 36 turkeys for those who were poor. Since then they have started an organization called Turkeys 4 America. In recent years they have collected more than 6,000 turkeys to give to people who are poor at Thanksgiving.

Reaching Out to the World

Kori Smith, a teenager from Michigan, and her friend Natalie Alhonte established a group called Teens for Humanity. They travel to poor countries around the world to deliver food, clothing, and toys to underprivileged children.
